I am interested in applying for Approved Clinician (AC) status what should I do?

- Are you a senior clinician who is sufficiently experienced to capably, and with authority, exercise the autonomous decision-making required of an AC?
- Consider whether you are eligible to apply for AC status.
- Ensure that you understand the role of the AC and Responsible Clinician (RC)
- Consider carefully why you are thinking of applying to become an AC.
- Discuss with your employer (professional line manager / appropriate Clinical Director) and a current AC to ascertain whether they believe you have the competencies required to successfully apply to become an AC.
- Consider with your professional manager whether you need to acquire additional skills, knowledge and experience through CPD and by undertaking further appropriate training before you will be eligible to apply for AC Status

- Consult your employers' policies, procedures, and selection criteria for AC where these are available.
- Ensure that you have organizational support from your line manager and a plan for your envisaged deployment as an AC/RC.
- In addition, you should ensure that such plans have the support of your Medical or other relevant Clinical Director. They will ultimately need to support your application.
- Identify at least one mentor who is an AC and who is prepared to support you in your preparation.
- Be mindful of the challenge to existing and traditional roles and conventions. In doing so consider potential cross-professional issues and conflicts, especially the relevant responsibilities and authority of the RC and medical AC in treatments for which you may not have professional competence.
- Local policy guidance or Practice Notes should be consulted or developed as necessary.
